Snake River Sporting Club is growing

More than 25 properties worth close to $50 million were sold in 2018 at Snake River Sporting Club and sales this year continue to be strong.

Jeff Heilbrun, executive vice president and director of sales at the club, in the Snake River canyon south of Jackson, said “there has been tremendous growth in interest and recorded sales over the last 16 months” at the 1,000-acre golf course and residential development. The sales reported for 2018 were up 43 percent over the previous year, he said.

Heilbrun also announced the start of phase three of The Lodges, the last of the club’s resort properties, and said work has begun on some units. The final phase of development includes 18 freestanding two- and three-story “Lodge Cabins” and another 14 three-bedroom condos in a single “resort-style building.”

Snake River Sporting Club’s golf, hiking, fishing and rafting activities are complemented this summer by a new glamping option that will have 10 sites in the adjacent Bridger-Teton National Forest.

Adding to the attractions is the start of work this past spring at Astoria Hot Springs, a longtime natural hot springs resort that has been closed for years but is now being reinvigorated. The Sporting Club donated $1 million to the campaign being run by the Trust for Public Land to build pools, picnicking areas and finally an adjacent public park on 98 acres next to the Snake River.
